BBC. (2013, March 29th). Horizon: The Creative Brain. How insight works. [Documentary Desire Episode]. Retrieved from <http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=C2L0t-EN2Yo>
A fairly long BBC documentary which focuses on science determining exactly where those EUREKA moments come into existence. The study and focus of the documentary is primarily concerned with the how/why of identifying the areas of the brain that are utilized during creative thought and why the abilities are dependent on the brain's specific biology and chemistry.

Bernard, R. (2014, September 21) Educational uses of digital storytelling. Retrieved from <http://digitalstorytelling.coe.uh.edu/index.cfm?id=44&cid=44>
The aim of this website is for educational use. It was created by faculty and graduate students from the Learning, Design and Technology Program at the University of Houston College of Education. The site contains examples of digital storytelling, "how to" approaches and other educational materials. This site is significant because it shows how digital storytelling can be integrated into a variety of educational activities and will provide a useful link for us as we determine how our lesson will unfold. The site will also provide students with relevant examples. the digital stories provided include many topic areas but our focus will be the stories with social justice issues.

Delacruz, E.M. (2009). Art Education Aims in the Age of New Media: Moving Toward Global Civil Society. Art Education. 62 (5), 13-18. Retrieved from http://bcartsweek.org/assets/uploads/files/art_education_technology_global_civilization.pdf
Art education and technology combined has the potential to critically engage and communicate global issues on a global scale. The articles claims that art educators are unified in a belief that art education can make a difference in an increasingly complex, interconnected world, and that art classrooms are places where young people may make meaningful connections to the culture, stories, and experiences of others (p.3). The article emphasizes the potential that art education and technology pedagogy can combine to create a culture of caring on a global scale which is necessary for the future of maintaining a global civil society.

Gillespie, Theresa. (2011) iPads in the Art Room [website]. Accessed on March 25, 2014 <http://ipadsintheartroom.weebly.com/>

This is an educator's blog about the use of iPads in the art room. The site has links to a variety of APPS that can be used for all kinds of different art creations, from painting and drawing to photo manipulation and animation. This site could serve as an excellent resource for both teacher and student when looking at the use of technology in the classroom.

Grauer, Kit, Castro, Juan Carlos & Lin, Ching-Chiu. Encounters with Difference: Community-based New Media Programs and Practices. (2012) National Art Education Association Studies in Art Education: A Journal of Issues and Research. 53(2), 139-151

This article examines the implementation of community based learning in the arts by using a 3-year case study of new media programs at the Gulf Islands Film and Television School (GIFTS). Some of the prominent findings include: (1) Students worked as a collaborative community to learn and evaluate alternative perspectives and create new knowledge. (2) The exposure to and interaction with difference leads to cultural education and growth. (3) The flexibility of the programs offers greater engagement and enjoyment for the youth.

Ito, Mizuko, Horst, Heather A., Bittanti, Matteo, Boyd, Danah, Herr-Stephenson, Becky, Lange, Patricia G., Pascoe, C. J. & Robinson, Laura. (2009) Living and Learning with New Media: Summary of Findings from the Digital Youth Project (The John D. and Catherine T. MacArthur Foundation Series on Digital Media and Learning). MIT Press

The authors examine youth engagement with new media by investigating their level of participation in communities. The authors first identify and define the types of communities (interest-based, friendship-based) that exist in new media (including social media) and then they analyze media engagement and models of learning in the different types of communities. The authors draw lessons regarding pedagogical approaches and learning opportunities for peer-based learning in networked communities.

Jenkins, Henry, Purushotma, Ravi, Weigel, Margaret, Clinton, Katie & Robison, Alice J. (2009) Confronting the Challenges of Participatory Culture: Media Education for the 21st Century (The John D. and Catherine T. MacArthur Foundation Reports on Digital Media and Learning). MIT Press

The authors focus on the production and sharing of content and mastering the dynamics of participatory culture (which the authors state as the fundamental purpose of education) among youth. The authors define participatory culture as one with low barriers to entry, strong support and mentorship and they explore pedagogical approaches that yield greatest value in terms of youth engagement with participatory culture. Their main findings are that: (1) The educational value of learning social and cultural skills for mastering participatory culture are essential and should be mediated by mentors/facilitators. (2) Some of the issues that require further exploration are access, role of appropriation and meaningful intervention.

Johnson, Steven (Narrator). (2010, September 17th). Where good ideas come from. [RSAnimate episode]. Retrieved from <http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=NugRZGDbPFU>.

An RSAnimate film on the importance of creativity in conceptual thinking. Narrated by Steven Johnson, the talk is focused on defining the different patterns that emerge when studying large scale population's creative thoughts and innovations. He also speaks about the internet effect and how it has evolved the population's understanding of the world around them and how that will affect the previously mentioned topics. The whiteboard visuals help to emphasize and simplify the fairly complex ideas that he speaks about and make them palatable for the uninformed viewer.

Retrieved From <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=HOMgDbcA84A>.

The subject in this video is a unique artist who became famous on Ukraine's Got Talent television program in 2009. It is relevant to our project in that the artist uses her skill to tell a story.

Although she tells her story through a different artistic medium, she uses images to depict a powerful story that addresses a social issue. The combination of music, images and physical expression combine to create a powerful artistic performance that could be used as an example with our students when introducing this project.

Levine, A. (2007). 50 ways to tell a story. The new media consortium.

<http://cogdogroo.wikispaces.com/StoryTools>

This is an informative website resource that can be used by educators and students who are interested in telling digital stories using web 2.0 tools. The site offers over 50 examples and links to many tools that can be used to tell a story. The intro to the site references the fact that it was not too long ago that creating digital content required exclusive, technically complex, and expensive equipment. Currently, if one has a web browser, internet, and device ranging from a computer to cell phone then creation of creative multimedia stories is possible. Story can range from deep and personal, trivial commentary, to social justice yet can be shared through a variety of new media 21st century modes beyond a simple text.

This article addresses the importance of the arts in affecting societal change. It reinforces the idea that, "consciousness alone cannot affect social change; one must act to transform" (p.4). It looks at the role of the arts, particularly image-based pedagogy, and especially when it comes to allowing imagination and creativity to address issues of social justice in an artistic way. The article looks at two very different studies of arts that are working to create change; one at the university level and the other at preschool level. They suggest that art education needs to push the norms and encourage art that “disturbs the norms of the status quo or the unjust.” (p.22).

Using technology to help create emotional responses to art in a creative, innovative way. Trying to draw out empathy, and almost a sense of pity from the audience through art that responds to human impulses. A very interesting field of art, combining technology and traditional art installations to make the viewing experience interactive.

Robin, B. R. & McNeil, S.G. What Educators Should Know about Teaching Digital Storytelling. Digital Education Review - Number 22, December 2012.

This article looks at teaching and using digital storytelling in the classroom. It uses a five step model for instructional design known as the ADDIE model, put forward in the 1970s. This model outlines five steps to approaching the design of a digital storyboard, and would be an excellent approach for our group to take when designing out lesson itself. I especially think the emphasis on audience and using your personal voice is essential to the success of our lesson, in light of the fact that we are asking students to address a social injustice in their world.

Digital storytelling (DS) is a meaningful and powerful way to promote visual culture art education (p.7). DS within the art education realm affords contemporary visual cultural teaching opportunities to 21st century learners. The article explains DS telling as powerful in that it combines traditional characteristic of storytelling with a digital layer that combines images, music, narrative and voice thus adding further dimension to aspects of a story. According to the article DS telling affords learners to gain and practice multiple literacies, artistic skill and critical voice to global issues that can also be shared global. Facilitation of digital storytelling in the classroom is revealed (script, storyboard, production, Image preparation, criteria for evaluation, and critique).
